A WIFE'S GUIDE TO A HUSBAND WHO LISTENS TO THE HAIR NATION CHANNEL.

Be brave. Be loyal. Be ready to get the net, just in case. How to deal with a husband who listens to Sirius Satellite Radio.

1. Have patience. He's your husband, after all. Let him have his fun. It can be downright amusing watching him fiddle with the Sirius Satellite Radio doohickey.

2. Remove sharp objects from the room.

Your husband is going to start playing the air guitar again. A normal occurrence. In case he slips, you don't want him to knock over a Ming Vase or an antique lamp.

3. Applaud his efforts. Hey, it's not every day you find something to keep him occupied, even if it's something called the Octane Channel, which boasts of playing nothing but 100% pure Hard Rock. Give him a big hand.

4. Remember: his car is his castle. You rule the house, the remote, the basement, the DVD player. His car is where he cranks up Classic Vinyl, a channel dedicated to Early Classic Rock.

5. Talk to him. About Black Sabbath, the Grateful Dead, Jimi Hendrix, Aerosmith, Led Zeppelin, Alice Cooper. Don't be fooled just because he wears a Brooks Brothers suit to work every day. Go ahead, ask him which channel plays the most Tull.

6. Stock Up On Nacho Dip. Buy it in ten gallon buckets. In high school your husband ate this stuff on english muffins for breakfast. He remembers this fondly as later classic rock on the Classic Rewind Channel blares in his ears.

7. This is Rocket Science. It's called Sirius Satellite Radio because it comes to your husband's ear from a satellite in space, which, naturally, got up there aboard a rocket. Thus, it's rocket science. Act impressed when he "mentions" this at the dinner table.

8. Never Mention His Thinning Hair. Why state the obvious? Your husband listens to Buzzsaw, a classic Hard Rock Channel, because he considers it a major achievement that he never once got a haircut in junior high school.

9. Smile. Say your husband starts going on and on about the time he was 15 and rode his new dirt bike all the way over to the next county. Feel free smile... at the thought of his old bones tearing all over the place on a dirt bike.

10. Seek Assistance. Call Sirius Satellite Radio Customer Service Executives at 888 539 SIRIUS. They're ready to help 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. They can give you the low down on all 120 commercial free digital quality music, sports, talk and news channels your husband listens to. Or go to sirius.com for more details.
